CARLOAD TONOPAH MADE MACHINERY SHIPPED BY THE FOUNDRY TO AURORA

One carload of pumps shipped by Campbell & Kelly, of the Tonopah foundry, was a feature of the shipments from this camp last Friday. The pumps were billed to the Aurora Consolidated Mining company at Aurora and with motors weighed 14,000 pounds.

Altogether there were eight pumps and four motors in units of two.

They are used for pumping slimes and at Aurora will be employed with the Trent replacing apparatus. They are known as the Campbell-Kelly centrifugal slime pumps, which are superior to anything of the kind in connection with milling plants. The fame of the invention has spread over the universe and numerous inquiries have been received from points in South America and South Africa, but, owing to high freight rates exacted to the coast the company has not succeeded in developing an export business.

The greatest demand on the capacity of the company's plant, which employs twenty-eight men steadily, is to keep pace with the call for the little Tetrault two-stamp mill which has proven a wonderful success wherever introduced. One mill has just been delivered to Jim Clifford at Clifford and another is in operation at Elendale. The mill at Clifford is running only part time owing to the difficulty of finding water, but the plant is cooling money for the owner, who recently took off five pounds of amalgam worth $900 as the result of a twenty-hour run. At Athens two more stamps have been added and eight mills are operating in various parts of the state.

A recent inquiry from Toronto, Canada, was accompanied by a sample of quartz which the writer asked to have sampled with a view to determining a method of treatment. The specimen looked like marble and was about as unlikely a looking piece of rock as was ever seen in this part of the world. On its immaculate white face there was not the slightest discoloration and crushing showed the same characteristic without any indication of gold or other values, but when assays were run the foundrymen were surprised on finding the quartz yielded at the rate of $40 a ton in gold. The rock, about as large as a man's head, came through by parcels post.
